

YOUR

TURN:

BECOME

A

LANDSCAPE

ARCHITECT

If you love the outdoors, care about the environment, love working with people, and are creative, you could become a landscape architect.

STUDY HARD

The road to becoming a landscape architect starts here. Prepare by studying science, art, math, history, and business. Landscape architecture relies on a lot of the STEM skills you are already learning. And be sure to develop your communication skills: Good writing and public speaking are essential to landscape architects in their daily work. Read widely: Social studies, politics, and economics will help. But don't forget to enjoy literature: novels, nonfiction, essays, and poems. It all contributes to a well-rounded set of design skills.

Harvard Graduate School of Design,
Cambridge, MA