

Children expressing their thoughts and ideas through drawing, colouring and painting.

Engaging children can be relatively easy, and their unconstrained and unselfconscious involvement can stimulate new ideas. It is also a good way of engaging sometimes more reticent adults. Simple and novel graphics can help, and materials with which they are familiar will encourage them to join in.

Initial graphic style should be informal compared with the more polished products of later stages.

A co-ordinated team and well-prepared graphics emphasise commitment and promote credibility.
