

Paths as spaces

Wide paths – particularly urban streets and promenades – are potentially more than just places of movement and can therefore be designed as spaces that facilitate static activities. Busy urban streets are places for sitting, buying selling and performance. Long linear spaces can be designed to function simultaneously as paths and spaces.